

Quant Daily Digest

■ Daily Overview

1) Macro & Sentiment Jane Street reported a record Q2 2025 profit of $6.9 billion on $10.1 billion revenues, driven by volatility linked to Trump-era tariffs. The firm exploited tariff-induced price dislocations, highlighting persistent market inefficiencies in trade-sensitive sectors. Meanwhile, Chinese equities and Hong Kong markets retreated after a strong rally, led by declines in semiconductor and tech hardware stocks, signaling profit-taking and potential sector rotation. Japan's Prime Minister Ishiba Shigeru announced his resignation following electoral setbacks, injecting political uncertainty into the region. Bitcoin stabilized near $110K, supported by a record-high network hash rate, reflecting miner confidence and network security amid recent volatility. 2) Equities / Rates US equity markets remain supported by strong quant-driven trading flows, with volatility elevated due to tariff-related dislocations. The pullback in Chinese tech and semiconductor sectors may weigh on regional equity indices in the near term. Oil-related stocks, including Exxon Mobil, remain in focus amid ongoing sector interest, potentially benefiting from sustained energy demand. Rates markets are likely digesting geopolitical and trade policy risks, with implied volatility elevated but contained. 3) FX & Commodities Bitcoin's flat trading near $110K, underpinned by robust hash rate metrics, suggests consolidation rather than directional breakout. Gold continues its record run, driven by inflation and geopolitical concerns, attracting safe-haven flows. Oil sector equities' prominence signals ongoing commodity market sensitivity to supply-demand dynamics. 4) What to Watch • Q3 earnings from major quant and trading firms for volatility-driven revenue trends • Chinese policy signals following equity pullback, especially in tech and semiconductors • Developments in Japan's political landscape and potential market impact on regional risk sentiment

$7 billion gain! Wall Street trader who milked crores from India turned Trump tariffs into a fortune

Jane Street reported a record Q2 2025 profit of $6.9 billion on revenues of $10.1 billion, driven by heightened market volatility linked to Trump-era tariffs. The firm capitalized on tariff-induced price dislocations and increased trading volumes, outperforming major US banks in the quarter. This surge highlights the impact of geopolitical policy shifts on market flows and volatility, benefiting quant-driven trading strategies. The data underscores the importance of tariff-related events in shaping market dynamics and positioning for volatility arbitrage. Jane Street's success reflects strong execution in navigating complex global trade tensions.

Bitcoin trades flat at $110K. Analysts say recovery signs are supported by record-high hash rate strength

Bitcoin is trading flat near $110,734, indicating stabilization after recent volatility. The recovery is underpinned by a record-high Bitcoin network hash rate, signaling robust miner confidence and network security. Ethereum is outperforming Bitcoin, buoyed by strong ETF inflows, with analysts projecting a potential rise towards $5,000. Altcoins such as XRP and Dogecoin are demonstrating resilience amid mixed market conditions. Institutional interest in Bitcoin is resurging, suggesting renewed confidence from large investors. These factors collectively point to a cautiously optimistic crypto market outlook with stable price action and improving fundamentals.

Chinese Stocks Pull Back After Red-Hot Rally

Chinese stocks and Hong Kong equities experienced a pullback following a recent strong rally, with semiconductor and tech hardware sectors leading the decline. These sectors had seen the most significant gains in recent weeks, suggesting profit-taking or a pause in momentum. The correction indicates potential short-term volatility after rapid price appreciation. Market participants may be reassessing valuations amid ongoing policy developments and global economic uncertainties. Flow data and positioning shifts in these high-growth areas could signal cautious investor sentiment moving forward.

Gold is on a record run — here's how to invest, according to experts

Gold has experienced a significant rally, driving increased interest in both physical gold and gold-related financial instruments. The surge is attributed to factors such as inflation concerns, geopolitical tensions, and central bank policies favoring safe-haven assets. Market participants are seeing elevated trading volumes and inflows into gold ETFs, reflecting strong investor demand. Price action shows gold reaching multi-year highs, supported by a weaker dollar and subdued real yields. Experts advise considering diversified exposure through ETFs or mining stocks while monitoring macroeconomic indicators and central bank moves that could impact gold's trajectory.

Bitcoin Stays Below $112K After Tough Jobs Report and Fed Cut Bets. What Next?

Bitcoin remains subdued below $112,000 despite the U.S. August jobs report showing only 22,000 new jobs, well under expectations. The weak labor data has heightened market speculation of a Federal Reserve rate cut, typically bullish for risk assets. However, BTC's muted price action suggests cautious positioning among traders, possibly awaiting clearer policy signals. The disconnect between Fed cut bets and Bitcoin's performance highlights potential market uncertainty or profit-taking at current levels. Overall, flows into crypto remain tentative amid macroeconomic concerns and shifting monetary policy expectations.

Lucid (LCID) Group Surges 14% on Bargain-Hunting

Lucid Group (NASDAQ: LCID) surged nearly 14% to close at $18.41 on Friday, rebounding after six consecutive days of declines. The sharp price recovery suggests bargain-hunting activity among investors, potentially signaling a short-term technical oversold condition. This move stands out amid broader market dynamics, as Lucid's strong gain contrasts with recent weakness. The stock's volume and flow data would be key to confirming sustained interest or a transient bounce. No new policy or fundamental updates were cited, indicating the rally is likely driven by positioning and market sentiment shifts.

When does it pay to hedge FX?

The FT Alphaville article explores the conditions under which hedging foreign exchange (FX) risk becomes beneficial, focusing on the interplay between interest rate differentials and currency volatility. It highlights that hedging pays off primarily when the cost of forward contracts, influenced by interest rate differentials, is outweighed by the risk of adverse currency moves. The piece underscores the importance of considering both expected returns and volatility in FX positions, which is crucial for quant strategies managing currency exposure. This analysis aids in optimizing hedging decisions, balancing carry trade benefits against potential currency depreciation losses. The insights are particularly relevant for portfolio managers and quant traders dealing with multi-currency assets.

A wrong Fed could do the dollar in

The FT Alphaville article highlights concerns over the Federal Reserve's policy direction and its potential impact on the US dollar. It argues that missteps by the Fed, particularly in tightening or loosening monetary policy, could undermine dollar strength and global confidence. The letter to the US Senate underscores the importance of clear communication and prudent policy to avoid destabilizing currency markets. Market participants should monitor Fed signals closely, as shifts could trigger significant FX volatility and influence capital flows. Positioning in dollar assets may need adjustment if the Fed's stance deviates from expectations.
